This week I have just been working on learning power systems analysis and finding out better ways to approximate power draw within the rover system. Hopefully this will yield a better estimating system for battery drive time left and will let us plan in advance better the amount of drive time that will be available before the rover is built. I have also been learning more about the power budget excel sheet to go with this other research so that we can apply what I've been learning about in a practical way for the rest of the electrical team members to use.
